Poetry.

[Written for the Union Flag.] "AT REST!"

BY ALPHA. "A. J. Fletcher died July 16, 1870."

Fold gently the nerveless fingers Over the pulseless breast, And kiss the lips so silent, This tried one is at rest!

Oh, heart, so unselfish and tender ! Oh, brave soul! noble and true! Though long and sore was your journey, At last there is rest for you !

Through all life's toil and sorrow, He knew that rest could come Only with the Death-Augel, Who came to hear him home.

And he feared not the glorious Angel, When touched by his icy breath, But followed him into the valley-The " vale of the shadow of death !"

And just before the waters Of the River laved his feet, His dimming eyes were opened On a vision strangely sweet.

He saw on the shore celestial The one who had loved him best, Waiting with saintly pattenes To welcome him into his rest.

And the light that shown about her Glorified his dying face, Erasing the lines of anguish, And leaving a smile in their place !

We, his children, left behind him, Thank God that, ere life's eclipse, Our dear mother hovered round him-Her sweet name last upon his lips. ELIZABETHTON, Tenn., July 20, 1870.

[For the Union Flag] PETER JONES.

A Tub of Goslings. Peter Jones was one of those good hearted excitable men unfortunately addicted to the habits of intemperance He insisted that a good solid "drunk" was a necessary cause of medicine for him. His liver became torpid; and in a good many other respects his natural machinery would get out of order about twelve or thirteen times a year; and from six to ten good large drams of strong corn whisky was sure to put him right; by first putting him so desperately wrong that in coming to the right point he could not avoid making a good swel the start to turn the inside of his stomach thoroughly out. It is certain he went

Mariah-that was her name-but Peter pronounced it "Ma-ri-ar"-be lieved that Peter was a man of excellent sense, and of large general information. She never doubted the fact of his liver growing torpid periodically; medical aid in manner and quality stated. Peter always went to a country store a mile off to get the medicine, and invariably returned home to allow it to "work its course."

Mariah was fond of sound sleeping and at the times of these recurring periods of "family application," she never failed to make Peter a comfortable paloldest girl, by her mother's direction placed a small wash tub in the corner, in which Peter could store away his as, in his judgment, it was no longer needed in his stomach as a wholesome medicine. Peter generally renched home one and a half to two hours in

The case of "affliction," now referred to, occurred in the month of May .--During the evening a heavy shower of rain had fallen and exerted an unhealthy influence, in Mariah's estimation, on a broad of young goslings. To relieve them properly, she placed them in the large tub covering them with light fleeces of flax tow, and placed this tub-the gosling tub-in the other corner; Peter's midical tub was in its proper place. All went on as usual. Peter was heard to enter the homefortress a little later than usual and in hearthstone he hit more chairs than his afflicted liver-at least from that neighborhood. Possibly Mariah had required to the scene and heard the statement not spread the mattress and quilts as atla, fully, to identify

Death of Hon. A. J Fletcher.

From private information, we learn with great sorrow of the death of Hon. A. J. Fletcher, at his residence at Mendow Bend, Bradley county, early Saturday morning. His disease was congestion of the brain and liver.

Mr. Fletcher was born in Carter coun-
